

*This article is one of many available to download from the Commercial Advantage Training website at www.catllp.com
T: 01788 572 200
F: 0560 3414 068
E: enquiries@catllp.com*

The opinions expressed in this paper are those of the author, who has given Commercial Advantage Training permission to make it publicly and freely available.

In the spirit of that openness, we ask that any copy of this document remains intact, including this page, so that its provenance and distribution credits can be acknowledged.

You are free to use this material for any non-profit-making purpose (subject to any restrictions otherwise noted) as long as this header and any copyright & contact information are included.

Running Team Meetings

by

Tony Atkins, Managing Partner of Commercial Advantage Training

Running the team meeting is one of the most important jobs that a manager or leader does.

How well an organisation performs is in direct proportion to the motivation level of its people. The team meeting is a great opportunity to motivate. Correctly conducted, it is an outstandingly worthwhile management tool. Incorrectly conducted it can be a major de-motivator.

For team meetings to be successful there are five prerequisites:

1. Must be important

There must be a real reason for holding the meeting.

2. Must be interesting

How many of us have had to sit through a boring meeting? We must make sure our team do not do the same.

3. Have a formal agenda

This helps to maintain focus and, if issued beforehand, helps people to prepare and so contribute fully at the meeting.

4. Make them regular

If you can plan your meetings ahead and/or stick to a particular day and time people will be better able to ensure that they can attend.

Make sure that there is always a real business reason for the meeting. Including team performance and results will ensure that there is a real reason for holding the meeting.

5. End on a high note

It is important to end on a high note that causes people to act and makes the team feel good about their opportunities to achieve.

Objectives of Team Meetings

1. To deal with administration

This is not very interesting, but often necessary. People often dislike report writing, hate keeping records and try to ignore company rules.

2. To train

This is general training on the organisation, its service and its operating procedures.

3. To inform

Give any news about the organisation - performance, promotions, changes in the law, professional news etc.

4. To set plans

This gives the feeling of belonging.

5. To motivate

This is the most important of the five objectives.

Suggested Format for Team Meetings

The format suggested below is not the only format, but it works very well. Many of the most successful companies use it.

1. Welcome

Be genuinely pleased to see people. If we are not enthusiastic at the welcoming stage, the attendees will not be enthusiastic about the meeting.

2. Handle any obvious negatives

We want negatives out of the way at the beginning of the meeting.

If we know that our people are troubled about something we need to ensure it is raised and properly dealt with, so that the meeting can move forward.

If we know that they are worried about their security - bring it up. If we have heard that they are criticising other departments - bring it up.

3. 'How to' training

One of the best ways to tackle skills training is to develop a training cycle. One of the most effective training methods is repetition. Involve other people. Do not just pontificate meeting after meeting saying the same thing in the same way.

If one of your people is particularly good at something, use them to tell the meeting what they do. Apart from being very effective, it also has a motivational effect on the person selected. They are being recognised for something they do well.

4. Attitude reinforcement

Enforce the feeling of belonging by:

- informing of new services
- informing of organisational policy plans or forthcoming changes
- asking for contributions and feedback on the news that we have.

Then cover some formal aspect of attitude development.

5. Recognition

Thank the team as a whole. Praise top producers; new people who have had early success; the person or office that has exceeded their goals by the greatest percentage. Praise everyone who has achieved his or her goals, or have contributed additional effort.

Get the stars to say a few words to the group.

6. Sell impending events

Always end the meeting on a high note. Sell the benefits of any change in organisational policy. Announce and sell any changes in responsibilities, or any other items of note. Sell the next meeting.

Note

Tony Atkins will welcome the opportunity to discuss any views or comments prompted by this article. He can be contacted on his direct line number 01788 572 200, or by email at tony.atkins@catllp.com.

Commercial Advantage Training will be happy to discuss your specific business needs and help you to deliver the right development for your people.